Immigrants have proud history of military service

...serving his second tour of duty in Iraq when he was among five soldiers gunned down by a distraught comrade at a stress clinic on May 11, officials said. Foreign-born soldiers have served and died in America's armed forces since the Revolutionary War, according to Lt. Col. Margaret Stock, a project officer for the Army on immigration issues and a professor at the US Military Academy at West Point. "We're a nation of immigrants, so why would we bar immigrants from the military?" Stock said. "In fact, we've won wars largely because of the contributions of immigrant soldiers." Legal immigrants are eligible to join the military, but they cannot perform jobs that require US citizenship, such as intelligence, according to Stock.

They are eligible for expedited US citizenship after serving for a few months, but must serve honorably for at least five years to maintain their eligibility. Illegal immigrants are not accepted in the armed forces, according to Stock, but can be called to serve in a mandatory draft.

Stock said many members of the military dismiss critics who say allowing immigrants to serve reflects poorly on the willingness of the native-born to enlist, or encourages people to seek a shortcut to citizenship.

"I think it would be wonderful if Americans started studying Arabic and Pashtun at age 3, but there doesn't seem to be any effort at teaching anything in our schools other than English," she said. "You cannot deploy globally without the contributions of immigrants; the cultural skills and the language skills they contribute are integral to the success of the war effort."
