mense mirror. However, one of the most fascinating aspects of the design is the drop ceilings in various shapes that distinguish one section of the living area from another, yet at the same time unifies the design. Gina pointed out that there are at least three different colored lights incorporated in the drop-ceiling design so the lighting would match whatever mood she has for that particular day – be it white, yellow or blue.

Gina is a woman who definitely knows what she wants in life yet doesn't rush into decisions without any consideration. Even back in 2003, when there were just a few residential developments in Eastwood City, she had been reading up on this new satellite city and knew that there's a great future for the area. She chose Eastwood mainly because of its location. "It's all about location, location, location," she states. "It's near the school here, it's near Megamall, it's she can just walk down the street and she's already in the middle of various choices of cuisine dining, a few steps more and there are at least two more shopping centers to choose from in Eastwood's Citywalk. There, she can just leisurely shop or spend the afternoon at the beauty salon, or even catch a movie. No more traffic jams to contend with. The accessibility of conveniences reminds her of her home in Manhattan, New York City. She even jokes about working at one of the many call centers in Eastwood City CyberPark someday since it would be just literally like going next door.

The hallway contains precious antiques from Gina's travels within the country.

the one in Idaho, where she works; one in New York where she lived for 15 years and still keeps a place there; another one in Waikiki, Hawaii, a house where she can hear the sound of the water; and her Eastwood home in the Philippines. She makes sure she visits her family here at least twice a year.

"I am 101 percent Filipino," she declares with a smile. When it's time for her to settle down, she will definitely retire here in the Philippines. "I love it here, my family's here. I keep the values because it's good and it's what my family instilled in me." She smiles the contented smile of the one who knows for sure that no matter where life and her job takes her, she always knows how to find her way back home.

The granite wall, mirror and wooden cabinetry of the foyer immediately make one feel at home at Fil-Am Gina Santiago's Eastwood City condo unit.

The master's bedroom contains Gina's mementos from her travels to Korea and Hawaii, among others.

near Makati. I live in Valenzuela, so we can stay here and relax whenever we go out and rest first before we go home."

She points out that in Eastwood City, from her condo,

Being a New Yorker, Gina rarely uses the kitchen. But she of course had it designed to be neat and clean.

For now, she divides her year among her four homes—
