

Way to go, Judy Ann and Ryan

Ryan Agoncillo and Judy Ann Santos

MANILA—Many celebrity weddings are played for all of the gloss and glitter they're worth, with big-bang nuptial rites, multiple sponsors and, literally, a cast of hundreds. To their credit, Ryan Agoncillo and his bride Judy Ann Santos recently "dared" to flout that big-bash and big-deal stereotype, and opted for what may be described as an "anti-celebrity" wedding set, not at the Manila Cathedral, but in the relatively recondite parish church of the bucolic town of San Juan, Batangas.

80 guests
To uphold the solemnity and personal significance of the occasion, the couple did away with a lot of the attendant fuss and bother that weigh stellar nuptials down, starting with the hundreds of VIPs who "have" to be invited to weddings and receptions.

Judy Ann and Ryan pared their list down to only 80, even if it meant earning the ire of "important" people. Now, that took guts.

In addition, Judy Ann made sure her estranged father was present, at the risk of offending her beloved mother. Happily, her mom later assured everyone she understood her daughter's need to be surrounded by her "complete" family on the important occasion, jokingly adding that she resisted the temptation to trip her former hubby up.

Levity aside, the "conflicted" nature of her parents' relationship may have been one of the reasons that Judy Ann opted to do away with the traditional march down the aisle, deciding instead to walk to the altar by her lonesome.

Another reason may have been that, at 30, she felt she had become her own person, so her solitary walk vivified this confident sense of being.

'Silent' coup
It was similarly heartening to realize that the Agoncillos' "secret" wedding couldn't have been pulled off without the cooperation of all of the people who had been invited to the wedding. In local show biz, it's unheard of that people keep secrets, so the fact that the "silent" coup was pulled off is a tribute to the love that their relatives and friends felt for the engaged couple.

For their part, Judy Ann and Ryan also earned the admiration of many for the creativity and brio with which they pulled it off. Instead of doing things by rote, they added personal touches to the occasion that made it distinctly, feelingly their own.

It's just too bad that some people have been criticizing them for flouting the show biz-y baggage and adumbration that have weighed down so many celebrity weddings. Yes, stars "owe" their public and coworkers a lot, but they owe themselves—and deserve—much more.

No apologies
Before they became stars, they were persons. After their stellar careers ebb and eventually end, they will still be persons—so, they are entitled to uphold their personhood above all other considerations on one of the most significant days of their lives. Thus, they have nothing to apologize for, and it's their onion-skinned and sniffy critics who should be abashed.

The Agoncillos' desire to make their wedding rites their own gives us hope, because it indicates that we have some stars who don't allow their stardom to control and stifle them. ■

Baron just 'on loan,' still a Kapamilya

MANILA—Contrary to rumors, Baron Geisler is not moving to GMA 7. "I think ipapahiram lang ako ng ABS," he clarifies, "to do some episodes of a drama special, SRO Cinemaserye yata."

Doesn't he feel pressured to outdo himself after reaping awards for his superb performance in Jay? "Not at all, because I love my job," he says. "Awards are really a bonus."

And just like his career, Baron's love life is in full bloom. "Tinamaan talaga ako kay Rachel (Stephenson)," he tells us. "I hadn't felt this way since my relationship with Jodi (Sta. Maria). Even if Chelz lives in Australia, we chat online for hours daily. Thank God for webcams (laughs)! And we visit each other monthly. It's hard to have a long distance relationship. Sipag at tiyaga lang dapat. Our sweet reunions make the long wait worth it."

Looks like the barfly in Baron would need less alcohol now that he's intoxicated with love!

No comment

I cornered Karylle and asked if she's happy about the breakup of her ex Dingdong Dantes' team-up with Marian Rivera. "I'd rather not comment about that," K said. "It's almost mid-year and I'm ripe for change." So is she ready to fall again? "Love will come," she quips, "when it's time."

For now, her heart seems to be on time-out mode.

Great feedback

Carmina Villaroel is overwhelmed by the great feedback she got for her performance in Maalaala Mo Kaya.

"I missed doing drama," she says. "I grew up in ABS-CBN. It's always fun working with them."

Does it signal her return to the Kapamilya network?

"Nope. I'm staying with GMA," she clarifies. "With my hosting, my schedule is toxic. But I hope GMA will give me a drama project soon."

Is she willing to work with her ex, Rustom who has since transformed into BB Gandanghari? "We're okay," she quips. "But I won't answer na lang about a project with him."

Guess Mina would rather not do a Maalaala Mo Kaya of the Rustom Padilla episode in her life.

Guess list

• During an out-of-town event, a drunk young actress barged into the room of a young actor. She started blabbering, "Ayoko na talaga sa show biz. Hirap, parati na lang nachis-chismis. Artista ako, you know. Smell my hands. Di ba amoy marijuana?"

The actor was flabbergasted. Was he roused from sleep to listen to her ranting? Looks like it's the young actress who needs to "wake up."

• A TV personality who was spotted kissing a foreign artist in a club was next seen in the audience during Pacman's bout with Hatton. Her plane fare and ticket to the match was said to be a gift from a married politico. Hmm... she's going places with various faces! ■
